BEYOND CRIME: PATHWAYS TO DESISTANCE, SOCIAL JUSTICE, AND PEACEBUILDING

Queen's University Belfast

Venues:
Elmwood Hall (Keynote Lectures)
Faculty of Social Sciences (Workshop Sessions)

With this year's theme of the conference "Beyond crime: pathways to desistance, social justice, and peacebuilding" we aim to broaden our scope of restorative justice, and therefore try to look "beyond" its application to the criminal justice system. Thus we hope to bring together a diverse range of perspectives focusing at different levels (the personal, the societal, the political), and inspired by a multitude of backgrounds and disciplines (such as criminology, social and political sciences, peace research, etc.). The three selected themes of the conference are highly interrelated, and offer opportunities to deepen our understanding, and to critically reflect on the limits and the potentials of restorative justice in an increasingly complex, intercultural, and divided world.

The European Forum for Restorative Justice welcomes presentations that address these main themes, but contributions on new developments and innovative approaches in RJ will be considered as well.

Desistance – Do RJ experiences help offenders to desist from crime? And if so, how does RJ as an "alternative" approach to crime control and punishment relate to current criminal justice policies and punishment models where risk assessment and evidence-based approaches prevail? RJ – as a positive and forward-looking approach – is often linked to the development of the Good Lives Model of Offender Rehabilitation. To what extent do RJ and desistance principles permeate in the work of prison officers and in probation work? Papers and workshops that look at these developments are welcomed.

Social Justice - How can RJ contribute to social justice, especially in an increasingly intercultural society? RJ is often said to be limited in addressing underlying causes of crime. By simply holding offenders accountable for the wrongdoings RJ overlooks the structural inequalities and fails to address a broader network of responsibilities. For RJ interventions to be meaningful and sustainable new alliances with a wider range of organisations and social institutions are needed. The workshops under this theme are invited to re-think, and probably to establish, the relation between restorative justice and social justice.

Peacebuilding – The central aim of this theme is to look at the value of RJ principles in the agenda of peacebuilding in divided, transitional, and post-conflict societies. Since several decades many countries emerging from conflict have opted for so-called transitional justice mechanisms to help and deal with their past. Gradually also RJ principles became introduced into several of these mechanisms. Papers and workshops on innovative developments or creative applications of RJ in peacebuilding settings are welcomed.

Field trips (new for 2014!)

For this 8th edition - and as an integral part of the conference programme - there will be three parallel field trips organised on the second day of the conference. The aim is to introduce the participants to Belfast and to Northern Ireland, and in particular to its rich history on restorative justice and peacebuilding. Conference participants will have a choice out of three organised trips that are linked to the main themes of the conference: desistance, social justice, and peacebuilding.

HM Prison Crumlin Road (Desistance) – A creative and interactive workshop will be held on restorative justice developments in the criminal justice system, and the probation sector. The venue for this field trip is unique: HM Prison Crumlin Road, which is a 19th century prison in Belfast no longer used, and rebuilt into a museum.

Community-based justice centre (Social Justice) – An interactive study visit to a community-based justice centre in a working-class district of Belfast to discuss how restorative justice addresses justice issues in civil society (community, schools, families and organisations). The exact location of this visit is still to be confirmed.

Northern Irish Parliament in Stormont (Peacebuilding)

Northern Ireland bears a long history of political conflict, it certainly also serves as a unique example of transitional justice and peacebuilding in the world. A workshop on restorative justice elements in the transitional justice process in Northern Ireland will be held on a symbolic location, the Northern Irish Parliament in Stormont.

While registering for the conference, participants will be asked to subscribe for one of these three field trips including a workshop. Conference participants will board coaches at 1:30 pm for a brief tour of interesting historical landmarks with a tour guide commentary. Arrived at the respective venues, participants will be taking part in the interactive workshop of their choice. Return to the conference venue is planned at 5:00 pm.
